J. H. MATTHES, DESEASED

On Friday last occurred the funeral service at the Groton Presbyterian Church over the remains of J. H. Matthes, who died at his home in Chicago on Monday, June 29th. Deceased had never been a resident of Groton, but here his parents were buried as was his brother Frank, all residents during Groton's early days. He was a native of Horicon, Wis., so was well known to the Wagoner families and others from that section of Wisconisn. He was fifty-seven years of age, and had long been a resident of Chicago, where he had attained a wide reputation as a chemist and inventor, and was con-
